The idea that Christians are supposed to love one another is probably not shocking. We've heard that idea expressed hundreds of times in Sunday School, in church services, and if we have read the Bible we've read it for ourselves. The danger is that we can become so familiar with this teaching that we stop thinking about it. We stop thinking about what it means to truly love one another. Sometimes we skim through familiar teachings like this so we can get into something a little "deeper." The tragic result of this is that we end up spending very little time thinking about the meaning and application of loving each other. I believe this is a tremendous mistake. First John 4:7 says love is a central identifier of someone in a relationship with God. Those who are born of God love like God.

will not do iniquity;
every morning doth he bring
